BERNARD SHAW AND ELLEN TERRY
A Tale of Two Friends (By Henry Thompson)
The New York Times Book Review

BERNARD SHAW and Ellen Terry—a correspondence over a period of more than twenty years—edified by Christopher St. John, and published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, N. Y.

It seemed to me that an introductory note and internal evidence indicated that the collating material by which the letters have been set down was compiled from two envelopes, both of which had been brought together in a churchwarden's dossier and a document that was of equal age as a photograph of the whole affair.

Shaw admits that he has always been an actor playing a part upon the stage of all the world and delighting in that part. He is an actor's actor, and perfecting his performance in it. He was eight years younger than Ellen but he played a leading part of youth.

This play was staged in an old church of letters and the two principals gave it the very best that was in them. Neither was afraid to fail or let upon stage.

There was, however, a difference in them. Ellen was not a woman who had an overmastering purpose. Shaw, at the other hand, always has a man with a purpose. Everything he does is full of a purpose! Throughout this correspondence it turns out that Shaw was the writer of the letters.

Nothing came of it except that Ellen wrote a few more letters, and several of the letters which are not by Shaw are of John Morley.

It seems that some of our students are for any given purpose, the new course which has recently been made up. It does not seem similar to those who have to study. But all study is prohibitively expensive. There is nothing in all the joy of college life.

The letters are full of references to meetings, but there are a large number of letters which are not by Shaw. The signatures are held throughout the day in the Little Drug. It is not enough to put on your muffler, please, when you cease to have sensitive ears, you are no longer a gentleman.

I simply couldn't bear it. I started down to driving, but the hitchhiker sat smoking, examining, no one behind the wheel, and my heart sank.

It stopped at Jasper for gas. The hitchhiker fumbled from his pocket a half worn-twenty-dollar bill and pay for the gas. If I would let him start. I tried to find work. For six months he had been out of work and for two weeks he had nothing to do. His brother had been killed in the World War and his father had died many years ago.

It was his way, it seemed, from Leicester to Birmingham, where he had tried to find work. For six months he had been out of work and for two weeks he had nothing to do. He brother had been killed in the World War and his father had died many years ago.

Looking up at me with his head, deep-set eyes, I had no mother, or father, only my sister. She is hungry now.

I tried to assure him that everything would be O. K. if he would only do his best, but he shook his head and said, "I must support my sister. I have no work to do."

"Why those are some things as we. Why can't we help him?"

I was not able to do anything about it. Even then she could not make out the meaning of his reply.

As we arrived in Birmingham, he went to work again, eating his breakfast. It was not his usual breakfast, as he was not a regular breakfast eater. But I have never forgotten the sight of that breakfast and have never forgotten the sight of that breakfast since he was lying on the floor.

"I have no work to do."

$14.50 Extra $3

...buys a new spring suit worth $19.50 and even dollars more

I’m telling my boy friends to get into one of these new spring suits . . . only $14.50, and with that quality roll, rich appearance. Patrons like these featured in every high-priced line . . . last season, but I bet they would not match the deal of $14.50 . . . and, they’re selling quick.

Alumni News

Eldridge Johnson, '28, now Mrs. Frost, writes that she has taught music at the post eight years in the Tuscarawas County High School, Zanesville. She is securing this year at Silver Cliff, New Mexico, for further study.

Alice Thomas, '20, has been teaching in the elementary department of the Montgomery school system for the past three years. She is a junior member of the Junior League of Montgomery. Also, we are hearing some bits of news about her, but probably that should be left in the social circle.

Virginia Purcell, '30, and Virginia Scott, '30, are teaching practical work in the Montgomery school system.

We have heard that Sara Kellinger, '28, is married. Why don't you write and tell us about her, Sarah?

J. A. Keller, '28, of Alexandria, a local alumnus, was elected president of A. E. A. for 1932-33.

Ruth Porter, '28, of Alexandria, a gifted pianist, appeared in recital recently at the assembly hour in Waynesboroysion. She was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Porter, '30, at the piano.

There is more than one way of expressing a direction, according to Mrs. Bivens. A telegram delivered in Philadelphia, March 29, instructed the sender to proceed to Manchester, N. H., leaving the train on the Mississippi River.

At a recent meeting of the Hipsich Club, the theme of Elizabeth Jackson, Margaret Rine, '31, gave a delightful review of the book, "From Diagram to Horse" by John Sabo. Mrs. Rine is personally acquainted with the author.

Maurice Graves, '27, Pliamson, visited Carolyn Merrick, '26, during the E. A. Committee's meeting.

RELATIONS CLUB DEBATE ON PROHIBITION

According to Dr. Green, in charge of the committee of the International Relations Club, the topic for this term will be generally discussed at the end of the season. At the present meeting of the term, held on March 22, a motion was taken up and discussed as a subject of prohibition.

The question was "The Direct Election of Senators Should Be Abolished and Authority Be Taken by the Supreme Court of Rights and wrongs."

The affirmative resolution was argued by Dr. Green, "the right hand is blind," and the negative was argued by John Sabo, "the left hand is blind." The judges were Edward Fisk and William Goodwin. The judges were: Miss Stiner, Stiner, Stiner, and Stiner.

The resolutions were not discussed. The debate on the subject of prohibition is to be continued in the spring meeting of the term.

According to Miss Golding seventy-two girls have entered the final term of the club. This term will be in charge of the club.

The Wednesday evening club has been reorganized. The first event of the new era was a hike to the camping spot at the end of the term.

The Hipsich Club has been reorganized. The first event of the new era was a hike to the camping spot.
